Every student has a story. As educators, it's an honor to listen to those stories and help those stories evolve.

Every student has a story, and as the 27th San Joaquin County Superintendent of Schools, Dr. Troy A. Brown's mission is to ensure that all students' stories are heard. Encouraging educators not only to listen to students' stories but to also play a key role in helping each story evolve from preschool to after high school graduation and beyond is at the heart of Brown's work, and this vision of his serves as a reminder of the importance of positive relationships and connections in education.

As County Superintendent of Schools, Brown will lead the San Joaquin County Office of Education (SJCOE) forward with a customer-centric approach to providing essential services for school districts and the public. He will also oversee the SJCOE's high-quality schools that serve our county's most vulnerable youth and work to expand the SJCOE's innovative programs and unique academic offerings for students, adult learners, and educators.

Brown is committed to working in collaboration with San Joaquin County's 14 independent school districts, charter schools, public service agencies, businesses, and institutions of higher education to meet the educational needs of all our county's children so that they can succeed and prosper.

Together, Dr. Brown believes that we can provide opportunities that enrich students' lives and maximize their learning potential, inspire students to be lifelong learners, teach students how to be active and engaged citizens of our community, and prepare students for success in their careers and adult lives.

Personal

Troy resides in Manteca with his wife Cindy and has four children; Jacob, Nicole, Allie, and Zackary - all of who attend or attended San Joaquin County schools. He leads youth groups at his church and enjoys baking, gardening, biking, rafting, and running in his free time.
